

(2.) FELT, in commerce; (§ 1, def. 1.) is a sort of stuff deriving all its consistence merely from being fulled, or wrought with lecs and size, without either spinning or weaving. Felt is made either of wool alone, or of wool and hair. Those of French manufacture, $3\frac{1}{2}$ yards long, and $1\frac{1}{2}$ broad, for cloaks, pay each 2 l. 14 s. 12 d. on importation; and draw-back 1 l. 12 s. 3 d. on exporting them again.

* To FELT. v. a. [from the noun.] To unite without weaving.—The same wool one man felts into a hat, another weaves it into cloth, another into kersey. Hale's Origin of Mankind.
