

Beet/ling, n. (Manf.) A process applied to cotton shirting, in which the yarn is so treated as to give the cloth a hard appearance, in imitation of linen. It was first employed upon linen shirting. A number of wooden stampers, placed in a row, strike upon the cloth as it passes under them, producing the effect required.